

An abstract painting with a textured surface. The top portion is dominated by light, pale green and yellowish-green tones, suggesting a misty or overcast sky. Below this, the composition transitions into a dense, dark expanse of deep blues, teals, and dark greens, with some lighter, almost white, highlights that create a sense of depth and movement, possibly representing water or a rugged landscape. The overall effect is one of atmospheric and naturalistic abstraction.

MALCOLM ASHMAN

"My landscape paintings are worked from brief drawings, memories and something deeper, maybe inherited memories I can't quite pin down. They are places I know well; this is an important part of the work, revisiting the familiar. At its core it's about the joy of solitude and the comfort of permanence."

Malcolm is a member of the Royal Society of British Artists (RBA), Member of the Royal Institute of Oil Painters, Member of the Bath Society of Artists.

DAVID PEARCE

"In these fast paced virtual times, I paint as it feels innate, constant, tangible. I try to work with a primitive directness, using seemingly simple compositions and just enough complexity and confusion to hold the attention. The paintings are deliberately intimate in size, with no ego or grandeur. I celebrate the innocence of awkward lines and nervous tension." David Pearce is a self-taught artist. He has regularly exhibited his work at the Royal Academy Summer Exhibition. In 2018 David had a painting selected for the John Moores Painting Prize.

ELLEN WATSON

The work of Ellen Watson embodies the elemental forces of the rugged Cornish coastline, with rich textures of oil paint and palpable creative energy. Taking inspiration from her surroundings and the neighbouring Isles of Scilly, she portrays untamed seascapes and weathered costal views, focusing mainly on the strength of light and 'that point of contact between the sky and the horizon'. She uses a sophisticated range of colour, from wholesome bases of earthy tones to gentle shades of blue and green merging with pastel skies.
